My darling precious Joe:—

It is so hot to-day, and yet, I know that you will have to hike to the Park. Sweetheart, believe me I sure do feel badly about it. And to think that after walking, you will have to stand and drill. My heart sure does hurt—because I love you so much.

did you find her still at the house when you got back? And are the still the same sore Mr. Branchs"?

I really wish you could be here instead of in the park. Outdoors it is broiling hot — especially where it is sunny. But somehow, even tho the sun is on our side of the street — it is rather cool — and the little breeze that we get makes it quite delightful. I can't help

Got up real early this morning — too early — so, for about an hour — half conscious — I thought and dreamed of you. Gosh! how I hated to get up. And there, I glanced over at Sadie — she was sleeping serenely, and thought — "You just wait until Wednesday — and maybe I won't make up for it!" But how about poor you?

thinking of what you must be undergoing in that park.

Mr. Swallow is still in that regeneration - but in a little better humor, for which I thank goodness and my lucky stars. I also ask of both of them to spare me long enough to see that thing finished. Then things will begin to resume their natural form and until then it is much harder for me — But I should worry - only were I were seeing you to-night.

Your everloving
Frances.
